A man seldom has the courage of his wife's convictions.

Theodore Roosevelt was responsible for the election of William Howard town. Taft to the presidency. Without the insistent advocacy of Col. Roosevelt, without the skillful working of the steam roller of federal patronage, Mr. Taft wou i in all probability have failed of nomination. It was as the advocate of "my policies," as the legatee of his sponsor, that Mr. Taft stepped into the presidency.

After three years in office, during which time he has displayed an inclination to conduct an administration of his own, to think for himself, to make his own mistakes and advance his own ideas, Mr. Taft now comes out in scathing denunciation of the man but for whose efforts he would never have been president. He declares that the election of Theodore Roosevelt this year would be nothing less than a national calamity.

Despite this appearance of ingrat itude, the American public likes President Taft for his Massachusetts speeches. Everyone knows how much he owes to Col. Roosevelt, but everybeen assailed by the colonel.
